A Local Historian's Efforts to Celebrate "America 250!"

Presentation by Martin Sweeney

Author, Historian, & Former Tour Guide of Historic Homer, NY

Martin Sweeney is the public historian for the Town and Village of Homer. He thinks the community should have ways to participate in celebrating "America 250!" He will share what he has learned about how some past July Fourths were celebrated in the Village and Town of Homer and the efforts he is undertaking for continued local observance of the national celebration.

Learn about Martin's play to be performed in November at the Homer Center for the Arts. Titled Tales Along the Tioughnioga, the two-act play will see figures from Homer's past come alive to tell of Homer's role in American history.

A black and white line drawing of a town skyline. It features several houses of different sizes and styles, some with multiple windows and doors. There are trees interspersed among the buildings. Two flags are flying on poles, one on the left and one on the right. The sky is filled with several fluffy clouds. The entire illustration is rendered in a simple, cartoonish style.

A black and white line drawing of a small, single-story wooden shop. The shop has a gabled roof with a chimney on the right side. A small window with shutters is located in the gable. The main body of the shop has horizontal siding. A sign above the door reads "THE SHOPPER". The door is in the center, flanked by two windows, each with a small awning. There are some plants or barrels in front of the shop. The shop is surrounded by stylized trees and bushes.
